

Slayer Faces Death Penalty

Convicted murderer Rick Stevens, former rock star with Tower of Power, was found eligible for the death penalty by a Superior Court jury in San Jose yesterday.

The seven-man, five-woman jury that convicted Stevens Thursday of the execution-style murders of two reported drug dealers deliberated about one hour before deciding that the "special circumstances" permitting imposition of the death penalty applied.

Stevens, 35, and Roy L. Davis, 25, former manager of the rock group Cold Blood, were convicted of killing Harry Austin and his brother, Andrew, last February in a secluded house near Los Gatos.

Superior Court Judge John S. McInerney set sentencing of Stevens for December 10. Davis is to be sentenced December 9.

No "special circumstances" hearing was scheduled for Davis.

Stevens was convicted of six other felonies and Davis was convicted of three in connection with a series of crimes in the Santa Cruz mountains.

A third defendant, Martin Edward Derouen, 32, was acquitted.

'Dear Citizen'

Dissident Loses Soviet Citizenship

Santa Cruz

A dissident Soviet author and civil rights activist currently teaching Russian at the University of California campus here said yesterday he has received a letter from the Soviet consulate in San Francisco that informs him that as of last September he is no longer a Soviet citizen.

"I do not merit such a high honor," 29-year-old Victor Sokolov declared in ironic tones, "but I will strive to."

Sokolov's citizenship was canceled by the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, which deprived author Alexander Solzhenitsyn of his citizenship.

Sokolov was granted permission to leave Moscow a year ago, after his marriage there in June, 1975, to Barbara Wrahtz, then a UC Santa Cruz student on leave to work for the U.S. Embassy.

Both before and after leaving Russia, Sokolov wrote articles critical of Soviet civil rights attitudes for Russian-language periodicals in the West.
